

I would like the FCC to address the issue of unsolicited facsimiles (fax's). I do not see why such senders are not subject to the same rules as those who use voice contacts for their telemarketing. In addition to the cost to me in paper and toner with each such bothersome fax, I find that they call during what I believe should be treated as prohibited times, i.e. beyond those permissible for voice calls. My family has been awakened by unsolicited fax's being sent to us after midnight during the week and on weekends. Attempts to identify the sender are fruitless as they strip the required header information. Calls to the opt-out numbers seemed to have stimulated an increase rather than a decrease in these intrusions. Please require them to comply with the Do Not Call Registry provisions, and please prohibit their calling/transmitting outside prescribed calling hours. Thank you.
